

and within 25 minutes, $1,000 risked turned into as much as $5,280.

ImClone (IMCL): Here's one from August 2003. After the well-chronicled troubles of ImClone - the stock Martha Stewart got in trouble for - the stock showed amazing strength through the middle of the year.

Then, from late June until late July, the stock ran up 50%. From this overbought position, the stock had two down days, with weak closes on July 30 and 31 - triggering the screen for a next-morning short sell on August 1st.

Looking at the 5 min chart, you'll see an incredible drop from the opening... those who followed my recommendation were able to ride ImClone as far as it could go, turning a $1,000 risk into as much as $7,530 in a little over an hour!

...Like I said, many of the recommended trades you'll see as a 10-Minute Trader last just 10 minutes or less. When you're in a trade for longer than that, like the IMCL trade, the only reason you'll be waiting around is because you're making more money.

Of course, you don't have to worry about any of the analysis. I take care of that for you... but I figured you'd at least want to take a look behind-the-scenes.

As far as I know, you won't find another trading system that offers you this kind of quick, consistent trading profits.

Use my simple technique and you've got the instant short-term trading edge.

It's proven to work. You'll know exactly when to get in. And when to get out. You only trade when conditions are right. And our effective method of letting our winners run helps to protect you from any big losses.

If you're skeptical, that's good...

While you could say this simple technique could be considered "day trading" - because it gives you the opportunity to at least double or triple your risk amount every weekday - the technique I'm going to tell you about is founded, tested, and established on over 15 years of investment and short-term trading experience.

You probably know that day trading got a pretty bad reputation a few years back. Thank the Internet Bubble market of the late 1990s for that... it made novice investors feel like everyone was making money in the stock market, except them.

When these uneducated investors started to believe the financial media's message - that making money in stocks was easy (everyone's doing it, right?) - novices became easy marks for all the various schemes and systems that suddenly appeared, promising stock market riches. All you needed was an Internet trading account and a "system" ...

But in truth, these "systems" were designed only to part regular folks like

"These semi-pro traders have a specific strategy.
They're not just in it for the quick buck."

- From "Day traders make a comeback," USA Today,
July 29, 2003

While the amount of day trading is rising, the day trader of 2003 is very you and me from our hard-earned money. That's because most of the worst ones left traders on their own to figure out how the system worked - and find the particular stocks they should be trading in the first place.

Those days are over.

Today, "short-term trading," or "semi-pro" trading, as it's called, is on an upswing. And today's semi-pro trader isn't the "dumb day trader" of the late 1990s.

An article in the July 29, 2003 USA Today, and another in the September 30, 2003 Wall Street Journal, reports that online brokerages for active traders report a significant rise in trading activity this year. E-Trade reports a 42% increase in active trading in the second quarter of 2003... CyberTrader, a unit of Schwab, reports a 28% increase... and TradeStation reports the number of accounts jumped 98% from a year ago, while the number of trades there has skyrocketed 111%.

So the next question is: why the growth in short-term trading?

Simple. When you have a system or technique that works, you can make a different than the day trader of the late 1990s Bubble - and a potentially less disruptive force on the broader market.

These traders are like Marlene Colean, 66, who three months ago kicked her trading into overdrive. From her home office in Fort Pierce, Fla., overlooking the Indian River, Colean trades roughly 8,000 shares a day and claims she's seen a 52% return since March.

But unlike many day traders of the 1990s, Colean has discipline. She is keeping her day job as a Realtor at the firm she owns. Only on busy trading days does she ask her son to overlook things at the office until she arrives in the afternoon. And she sticks to strict rules to prevent catastrophic losses. She sells a stock before it falls even 1% from the price she paid.

This time day traders are lot of money.

I watched as the day trading phenomenon of the 1990s turned into a financial disaster for day traders... I wish I had the chance to show them what they were doing wrong. They didn't have to have the catastrophic losses they did, if they had avoided the following mistakes.

quasi-professionals who stick to strict trading rules ... Schwab's [Vincent] Phillips says, "These semi-pro traders have a specific strategy. They're not just in it for the quick buck."

The disciplined short-term traders of today don't make these mistakes...

The 6 biggest mistakes short-term traders make - and why you won't make them with 10-Minute Trader

#1: No entry or exit plan. "Making a lot of money" is not an entry or exit plan. The most unsuccessful short-term traders buy a stock because they've heard a lot about it on CNBC, for example - the absolute worst reason to buy a stock... especially for short term trading. The trader really has no idea if the stock will go up or down upon entry - if the stock has already exhausted its run... or if it's just getting started. Should they get lucky and the stock goes up, they have no idea when to exit the position... except for when it "goes down a lot." This is a sure-fire way to empty your brokerage account very quickly.

With my technique, you have a crystal-clear entry and exit plan, so you're never left wondering what to do.

#2: Risking too much of their account on one trade. In the go-go days of the late 1990's, we heard and read stories about people who risked big and won... and also about those who risked big and lost. Unfortunately,

those on the losing end outnumbered the big winners 50 to 1. Risking big to win big is a recipe for disaster, as too many folks have found out in the last three or four years.

With the 10-Minute Trader service, I emphasize risk control in everything we do -- each trade has a defined risk, and I encourage you to risk very small amounts on any given trade.

#3: Don't truly understand what they're doing. As I mentioned earlier, greed is what fueled the rise in day trading in the 1990s (everyone's making money in stocks - it can't be that hard!). If you enter a 10K bike race but don't know how to ride a bike, you will most certainly lose... and you'll probably get seriously hurt. Look, you don't need a degree in finance to make a lot of money in stocks. But you do need to know what a stock is and how they're traded first. Many of these day traders first exposure to the stock market was all that financial media hype they heard from mainstream news sources.

My technique is so simple and easy to understand - and I do all the hard work for you - that you'll know exactly what you're doing when you execute any of my 10-Minute Trader recommendations.

#4: Overtrading. This common mistake is one which inexperienced traders almost always fall victim. They'll enter a position, lose money on it... then quickly enter another position, and risk more money, to try to make back what they lost.

I'll share a simple secret with you in a moment that will ensure that you'll never make this mistake. And the 10-Minute Trader will give you the discipline that will keep you from overtrading. Instead of overtrading, you'll be taking only the highest quality opportunities - capitalizing only when the market gives you a clear edge.

#5: Trading on bad information. Investment chat rooms... CNBC and the mainstream financial media... even "hot tip" e-mails. Beginner short-term traders see this information and think, "these people seem to know a lot more than I do about this stock... they sure sound like they're right about what it's going to do." Trading on this kind of unreliable information (which could be made up, for all they know) is one of the worst mistakes you can make in short-term trading - and one big reason why many novice traders lose so much money. They didn't know any better...

... But you'll be 10 steps ahead of these people, because my technique is based on sound, technical analysis that has nothing to do with "hot tips" or rumors from any source, from the mainstream media's "hot stocks to buy now" list or a "pump-and-dumper" in a chat room.

#6: Getting into a trade too late. Sometimes you can make this mistake and never even know you made it. The most inexperienced traders use their online broker - along with whatever hot tip they're trading on - to execute their buy and sell orders. Problem is, short-term traders capitalize on quick, short-term moves in the market... and you have to have your order executed just as quickly to make a profit. It's certainly not a problem to use an online broker... but use certain brokers, or send in the wrong type of order, and you run the risk of missing out on big profits.

And if you miss the major movement by not recognizing when the big jump is done, you're actually getting into what looks to be a winning trade - but it's really on the way down.

With my 10-Minute Trader technique, there's absolutely no guesswork. I'll show you the best way to enter the trade. And following the clear entry and exit signals in each e-mail, you'll be in - and out of - every trade at exactly the right time.

The 10-Minute Trader advantage - even if you're new to this kind of trading

Even if you're new to short-term trading, I'd like to invite you to join me.

When you do, you'll begin receiving my short-term daily trading recommendations by e-mail right away.

As I said, you don't need a whole lot to be successful with the 10-Minute Trader technique... but I want to make sure you have every advantage.

But before I tell you about that, I want to make something very clear to you...

While this kind of trading is certainly fun, easy and profitable, it is not for the average investor. It's for serious traders only.

Here's the reason: In order to successfully trade using my technique, you should have a minimum brokerage account of $30,000.

This is because of Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) regulations - if you make more than four trades in a five-day time period, your brokerage account will be "flagged" by the SEC as a "pattern day trading account." This means, simply, that the SEC wants you to have a minimum brokerage account balance of $25,000 if you're going to be trading on a daily basis.

If you can't do this kind of trading, then my 10-Minute Trader technique is not for you. As I've described in the earlier trading examples, you'll only ever be risking 1/2 to 1% of your total capital using my technique... but the fact remains that you should have an account of this size because of the frequency of trading.

So, if this sounds like the kind of trading you'd like to do, when you join, I'll send you my brief 10-Minute Trader primer as soon as you sign up. This short brief will give you the few tools you need to succeed as a 10-Minute Trader.

The only thing you really need is a computer with Internet access. It doesn't matter if you have a super-fast broadband connection or a dial-up connection.

In this quick report, I'll let you know the best brokerage to use for your situation. And if you're new to short-term trading, I'll show you how to place your buy and sell orders after you receive your daily trade recommendations.

You'll be surprised at how simple it is.

I'll also explain the "R" I told you about earlier in this letter. Simply put, we don't measure the success of our trades in percentages, like many trading services. Instead, we use "reward vs. risk," which is what the "R" stands for. In this one concise report, I'll show you exactly how that works. I'll also share in detail how, exactly, to use the risk-protecting secret of "position-sizing" with your 10-Minute trades.

Regardless of your experience in short-term trading, I encourage you to try trading with us - because you really don't have anything to lose.

Here's what I mean...

Because I've proven that my simple short-term technique works - with 18 of the last 19 months being profitable - my publisher suggested I charge between $4,000 and $8,500 for new 10-Minute Trader subscribers... figuring that, with the profits this technique can make you in a 30-day period, you'll likely make the subscription price back within the first month of joining.

But it's more important to me that you're not spending an arm and leg to see for yourself the kinds of profits 10-Minute Trader can give you.

So, you're welcome to start trading with me for just $1,000 for a year of 10-Minute trade alerts.

How to start 10-Minute Trading today

If you're still hesitant about giving 10-Minute Trader a try, I've arranged an added incentive for you to try us out - a full 30-day money-back guarantee.

Which means: you can start trading with 10-Minute Trader right away... and if you don't make the kinds of profits I'm confident you'll make within 30 days, you will receive your entire subscription fee back. Absolutely no questions asked.

Chances are great that you'll easily make back your subscription fee in your first week of trading... maybe even the first day you start trading with us.

But if, for some reason you find this kind of trading isn't for you, or you don't make the kind of profits you expected, within the first 30 days of your subscription you won't be out a dime.

If you're not 100% satisfied with 10-Minute Trader, I'll refund every penny you paid.

No questions asked.

Also, if you decide after 30 days you don't want to trade with me, that's OK, too. In that case, you'll get a pro-rated refund, based on the unused portion of your subscription... once again, no questions asked.

Of course, I can't promise you that every 10-Minute trade will be profitable. As I said, like every other investor out there, we do have losing trades.

While nothing in investing is guaranteed, I can promise you this: When you receive your early-morning e-mail trade alert, you're getting the very best opportunity each day to have fun making great profits, fast - without being tied to your computer all day.

After all, what fun are great profits if you don't have time to enjoy them?

Remember, 18 out of the last 19 months of 10-Minute Trader recommendations have been profitable... and I certainly expect that to continue, especially in a market as volatile as this one.

So if this kind of trading appeals to you, make a modest investment in your future and join 10-Minute Trader today.

Once you see how this safe, simple technique can make your trading more profitable and more fun - in just 10 minutes a day or less - you'll find that this is the ONLY way you'll ever want to trade again.

God bless you,
